

TECHFLASH

Google Fiber expands Austin high-speed service

Jul 13, 2015, 2:38pm CDT

The Google Fiber ultra-high-speed Internet service will expand into Southeast Austin, the company said Monday.

According to Google, the service is being expanded to the Onion Creek, Dove Springs, East Oltorf, East Riverside and Montopolis neighborhoods over the next several months. Onion Creek sign-ups are open through July 16, while the other neighborhoods have sign-up periods extending into this winter.

Check out Google's website for Austin Fiber service for a complete list of the details.

Fiber service is being currently rolled out into neighborhoods in central South Austin, with the first subscribers going online in late 2014.

Want Austin Technology news in your inbox?

GOOGLE INC.

A worker stands over a boring machine used to lay fiber-optic cable that will one day... more

HOME OF THE DAY

